Nashville country scene of the mid to late aughts.

It's been nearly a decade since we first made the acquaintance of Fritz, back when he was a raw-boned Virginian with a shaved head who bore more than a passing resemblance to a young Billy Bob Thornton. By then he had recorded a few DIY albums, traversed India on a mystic pilgrimage and written a series of "marriage songs" in the midst of a Yerba Matte binge in Argentina. Naturally, we became fast fans. In fact, he may be the only man on Earth we'd send to interview David Allan Coe.

For Sunday night's show at the Basement, Fritz played mostly stuff from his latest album, the Jim James-produced Sweet Creep. He also dipped into his back catalog for old favorites like "Trash Day," "Silver Panty Liners" and "Chevy Beretta," a cult classic he played as early as 2009 at the Basement with Caitlin Rose (who was in the crowd Sunday night) and John McCauley of Deer Tick.

Hedley, who recently signed a solo deal with Third Man Records, did time as Fritz's fiddle player for years and his playing Sunday night was just as poignant as we remembered it. On stage, the Florida native is like Sancho Panza to Fritz's Don Quixote, and a better match of performers is not easily imagined.

- LYRIC CONTESTS: An advertisement for the "ENTER THE AMERICAN SONGWRITER LYRIC CONTEST". It offers a PRS SE A20E guitar and a Sennheiser E935 microphone as prizes. The contest is for the November/December 2017 period.
- SPONSOR: Two advertisements for "gcg" (likely a legal firm) are present. Both feature the text: "Songwriters and music publishers: Learn if a recent copyright class action settlement with Spotify may benefit you." One is a dark-themed square graphic, and the other is a white-themed rectangular box.
- NEWS: A third article is partially visible on the right side, titled "Watch Courtney Marie Andrews' New Video For 'Irene'", accompanied by a photo of the artist.

U.K. MIDWEEKS: CHARTS ON FIRE

Arcade Fire are on track for their third #1 on the U.K.'s Official Albums Chart, with Everything Now (Columbia) way ahead of the field at midweek stage. Over on singles front, (which includes streaming happening on both free and paid tiers, by the way), there's another Spanish-language track in the Top 5.

MUSING ON THE MARKETPLACE

7/31/17

Only 13 albums on the latest chart sold over 10k actual ALBUM configurations. Two of these—Lana Del Rey and Tyler, the Creator—sold over 40k, and probably only for this, their debut week. Yet, even in this sleepy midsummer week, every Top-20 title scored above 20k SPS. Hence, in the immortal words of John Prine, all I can think is: "Pretty Good, Not Bad, I Can't Complain."
